Key Difference - Ethnic group vs Tribe

Ethnic groups and tribes belong to factors of social stratification. Ethnicity covers a wider range of community while tribe can be comparatively a small set of people who follow their historically adopted customs and traditions, living under one accepted leader. Various ethnic groups can also be described as the historical evolution of tribal groups. The key difference between ethnic group and tribe is that people belonging to one ethnic group share similar religious, linguistic and cultural identity but they can live in different places, whereas tribes comprise of a set of related families having similar tastes, ideology, religious and dialectic identity, most frequently living together in one place.

What Does Ethnic group Mean?

Ethnic group is a social group or category of people belonging to one common national or cultural identity. Hence they possess a common ancestry or a historical background. As stated by Anthropologist and consultant by Dr. Whitney Azoy, ethnic group is “the largest traditional cultural unit” to which a person belongs to.

As further explained in Oxford dictionary, an ethnic group is “a community or population made up of people who share a common cultural background or descent.” With birth, the ethnicity of a person is determined. In one geographical location, there can be several ethnicities living together. The United States of America, for example, is a homeland to many ethnic groups like African Americans, Asian Americans, Jewish Americans, Australian American, Canadian American, Spanish American, English Americans, etc. Their ethnicity is a manifestation of their ancestral origin.
Those belonging to one specific ethnic group share common similarities in religious, traditional, linguistic and racial identity. However, there can be diversities among them as well. For example, there may be those who follow different religious ideologies or use different languages even though they all belong to the wide term of their ethnic identity as ‘English Americans,’ according to their geographical ancestry.

What Does Tribe Mean?

Tribe is a collection of families, clans or generations that share common ideologies, interests, religion, linguistic and cultural practices. The significance of a tribe is that it is a set of people primarily having blood ties, living together in one specific area under one accepted leader to guide them. Anthropologist and consultant Dr. Whitney Azoy gives a clear definition of what basically a tribe means,

“Tribe refers- to an ethnic sub-set within which all or most human activities are organized on the basis of kinship. Tribal people interact with each other primarily in term of family relationships, both by descent and by marriage”.

Hence, the diversity of the members of one tribe is very low unlike that of those belonging to one ethnic group. Some well-known tribes in the world are The New Guinea Tribe, The Brazilian Tribes, The Surma tribe, The Sentinels tribe, The Korowai Tribe, The Vietnamese Ruc tribe, etc.

Usually, tribes prefer not to live in towns or cities, rather they prefer to live secluded as one group in the remote areas. However, it is considered as strongly associated with the colonial attitude to look upon tribes as primitive and under-developed people living in remote, underdeveloped areas.

Ethnic group can consist of individual who share several differences among themselves. Since tribe consist of people having blood lineage the differences among the members are very rare.

Summary

Ethnic groups and tribes contribute to create social diversity in the society. An ethnic group is a wider community when compared with a tribe. There can also be situations where several tribes are included within one ethnic group. Nevertheless, the key difference between ethnic group and tribe is that the people belonging to one ethnic group may share various diversities since they are not directly linked in blood to those in a tribe.
